BY RYAN GROSS

As we drive to Janet Coleman’s home, Zoo President and CEO John Chapo tells me of a kind woman who, as he puts it, “simply loves adopting Lincoln Children’s Zoo animals.” John tells me how she has been adopting our animals for years. I ask him why, and about the time he starts to answer I see a woman wearing a purple sweater, standing on her porch. It’s Janet and we pull into her driveway where she quickly offers us a warm greeting.

On this day, Janet has welcomed us into her home to tell us why, over the past couple of decades, she has adopted dozens of Zoo animals. As we enter her home we are instantly greeted with numerous pieces of artwork hanging on her walls. One large piece, which looks to be 8 feet long and 5 feet tall covers an entire wall. John asks her who created it and she tells us the artist is her son, John.

We take a seat and talk to her about the artwork. She begins to tell us why there are so many pieces of art in her home and it turns out that is where her story in Lincoln, NE begins.

In 1963, Janet and her husband Thomas moved to Lincoln from Kansas. He had received a position in the art department at the University of Nebraska. Janet tells us that many of the pieces of artwork in her home were done by Thomas. As you look around, it is difficult not to be amazed by his talent.

The conversation moves from art to John asking Janet when she first visited the Zoo. She recalls it was many years ago. Her relationship with our Zoo goes back to the summer of 1966 when Janet, her husband, and young son made their first visit to the Lincoln Children’s Zoo.

“Back then you would often see Mr. Folsom planting flowers or working in the gardens around the zoo,” Janet remembers. She tells us how her children loved the town square that once existed. How her children reacted when they first saw our animals. She painted a wonderful picture of what the Zoo was like in its early years.

John then asks her when she first started adopting animals. “Oh, it was so long ago I don’t remember. I do know they were only 10 dollars then,” she proclaims. I started buying them for my children when they were in college. Eventually they grew up and had children of their own so I started adopting animals for my grandchildren. I thought it was a much better gift for them than something that will get played with a few times and forgotten.

Janet’s children and grandchildren all live out of state. “I like to buy them an adoption package for Valentine’s Day and then when they come to visit in the summer they can go to the Zoo and see their animal.” Janet said.

She goes on to tell us many stories of her granddaughters, Willow and Rosalie, on their trips to the Zoo. “They get so excited seeing their animals,” noted Janet. Recently, Janet asked Rosalie what animal she wanted to adopt next. Rosalie responded with an excited, “surprise me!”

For Janet, buying adoption packages isn’t just about giving a gift to her children and grandchildren. It is about making a difference at our Zoo. From being on the board for the People’s Health Center, to bringing motivational speakers to local high schools, she is a person who likes to do things that make a difference.

As we leave Janet’s home I thank her for her time and take one last glance at two pieces of art on her walls. One is a large sketch of her daughter Kathryn as a baby sleeping in her crib and the other is of her daughter Cynthia. These two beautiful pieces of art are full of love. They reside in a home that reflects a person who has an infinite passion for her children, her grandchildren, and her community.

That is Janet Coleman.

Right now there are hundreds of species among us that are hovering near extinction, species like the Amur leopard and the white-handed gibbon that future generations may only get to know through photos. I wanted to do something to preserve these animals through photographs so I created the Biodiversity Project.

What is the Biodiversity Project?
It's a series of portraits using studio lighting that serves as a witness to all creatures great and small. Using black and white backdrops gives all species equal weight and importance. It is designed to get you to look all species in the eye and discover the wonder in them.

The hope is that these photos will help viewers to understand all creatures have intrinsic value and have a basic right to exist. To date I’ve photographed about 1,870 species this way. I add more every month.

Zoos and the Biodiversity Project
I’ve traveled to many zoos throughout the country and have photographed thousands of animals in my life. Zoos are one of the few places the public can see live animals these days, including those that are so rare they may never be seen in the wild again. The animal keepers at zoos do everything they can with the limited resources they have to save these animals.

Zoos like the Lincoln Children’s Zoo house many species that may be extinct some day. Their staff works hard to breed these species. If an animal successfully breeds, the offspring will often be sent to other zoos with the hope of creating a larger gene pool, with the eventual hope of re-releasing some into the wild if the habitat is there to support them.

The Big Picture
Even with zoos doing their best to breed these species, they cannot all be saved in captivity. There is not enough room on the Ark. Zoos, aquariums and other captive breeding centers simply do not have the funding or the space to save them all. Difficult decisions must be made: they now must choose which ones to let go.

To complicate things further, when the population of any animal gets down to a few, it gets increasingly difficult to fight inbreeding and keep the captive flocks and herds healthy. With humans expanding out into virtually every space on Earth to consume resources, it’s now a race against time to see what can be saved.

To me, each of the animals I photograph is a living work of art, no matter how small. Indeed, it is the tiniest species that run the planet and most deserve our attention and respect. Why is it we so treasure paintings and sculptures in museums that we’ll surround them with armed guards, but we’ll allow species to vanish each and every day and not utter a word? What will it take for us to finally wise up?

It is up to all of us. What will we cherish enough to take with us into the future? The good news is that if enough of us care, we can turn things around for many of Earth’s species. It is not too late. But first we must actually think about all this, learn what we can do to save the world, and then, most importantly, act. The fact that you’re reading this is an excellent start.

How You Can Make a Difference
First, make your voice heard. Study the issues, form an opinion and make that known. Perhaps more importantly, know that every dollar you spend matters. And above all, support organizations like the Lincoln Children’s Zoo.

Beyond zoos and aquariums, there are many other groups that are doing great work, from preserving intact landscapes to making sure our laws protect endangered species. I like Defenders of Wildlife so much, for example, that I actually joined their national board of directors.

So please, support organizations that work to save species. And remember that every time you break out your purse or your wallet, your purchasing decisions matter tremendously, from the kind of vehicle you drive to the furniture you buy. Truly, the power to save the world resides right in your pocketbook.
BY JOHN CHAPO

For nearly 50 years, millions of people have visited Lincoln Children’s Zoo. Many come to take a mid-day stroll and interact with their favorite animal. Our Zoo has come to be part of the community and part of people’s lives. However, many people don’t realize their favorite animal may be endangered and may not be around for future generations to enjoy. Our Zoo here in Lincoln, Nebraska is vital to future existence of many species of animals.

Many species of animals here at the Zoo are endangered. Twelve of these species are part of the Species Survival Plan known as SSP. The SSP program was established by members of the American Zoo Association (AZA) with the goal of saving endangered animal species from extinction.

Saving a species from extinction is quite complex, detailed, and expensive. Lincoln Children’s Zoo collaborates with other members of AZA to efficiently and scientifically save animals from extinction. An example of an SSP at work is the Humboldt penguins finding a home here at the Zoo.

About five years ago it was determined only a dozen American zoos and aquariums would be involved in saving the Humboldt penguins. The SSP asked zoos across the country to add Humboldt penguins and help ensure their future. We, at the Lincoln Children’s Zoo, decided to take part in saving them.

Much work went into acquiring the Humboldt penguins. Zoo staff had to determine what kind of habitat the penguins would need, what they would eat, what special veterinary care would be needed and many other issues. After analyzing everything needed to house the penguins, the Zoo sought permission to bring them to Lincoln.

The Lincoln Children’s Zoo was given permission to receive five pairs of Humboldt penguins and in October 2010 the new exhibit was opened to the public. This is just one example of how your zoo is part of something special. We are currently in the process of helping other species including the Ring-tailed lemur.

What we have done with the Humboldt penguins and now with the Ring-tailed lemurs makes a world of difference for the future of these species. We do this in the hope that future generations in Lincoln will have the opportunity to take a mid-day stroll and gaze at their favorite animal.

What’s New at Your Zoo

New arrivals brought to you by:

Saint Elizabeth Regional Medical Center

Peccaries Arriving this May

Two male collared peccaries will be joining the Zoo this summer. Peccaries are a medium-sized wild species of pig. They are found in Mexico, Central America, and South America.

Wrangler Roundup

Come on down to the Zoo and saddle up for one exciting ride. Little ones and even older folk will love this new horse ridin’ experience. We hope to see ya’ll real soon at Wrangler Round-Up.

Be on the Lookout for a New Red Panda

The Zoo welcomed a new red panda named Sophia. In November, Sophia made the trip from the Denver Zoo. Red pandas are native to the eastern Himalayas and southwestern China.

New Additions to the Ring-tailed Lemur Family

The Lincoln Children’s Zoo added two male ring-tailed lemurs in late 2011. Zookeepers are watching the ring-tailed lemurs closely, hoping for a birth in April or May.

Flying Squirrels

In February the Zoo welcomed two new baby flying squirrels. These flying squirrels came from Texas and will now be part of the Critter Encounter station in the Zoo. Guests will be able to get up close and meet these two new additions named Orville and Wilbur after the Wright Brothers.
An unforgettable experience awaits guests this summer at Lincoln Children’s Zoo. Beginning Memorial Day weekend, for a limited time, the Zoo will be offering guests the chance to ride a camel. In February, the Zoo agreed to work with an organization from Ohio to offer this incredible experience.

For $5 guests will ride the 2,000 pound animals through a scenic pathway around a portion of the zoo. The rides will be located next to the Zoo’s permanent camel boardwalk.

Zoo President and CEO, John Chapo said, “This is an exciting opportunity for the Zoo and the community, it’s not too often you get this close to a camel and ride one.”

Riders will be assisted by expert camel trainers while they ride the 8 foot tall animals.

FACTS ABOUT CAMELS

- Contrary to popular belief, a camel’s hump does not store water, but is made of fat.

- There are two species of camels: Dromedary (1 hump) and Bactrian (2 humps). An easy way to remember this is by thinking of the 1 hump in the letter “D” and 2 humps in the letter “B”.

- Camels can drink up to 40 gallons of water in one go.

- Camels have a third eyelid that moves sideways, front to back, and acts like a windshield wiper, brushing the eye clean of sand.
Safari Café

Safari Café is centrally located in ZooVille Square. Guests will find ample seating while enjoying excellent food at affordable prices. The menu ranges from cheeseburgers to grilled chicken sandwiches with a great variety of sides, including healthy options for children and adults. Zootique Boutique

The store is open daily at 10:00 a.m. when the Zoo is open and on select days during the winter months.
Starting in April, drivers on Capital Parkway will see a new, larger than life zoo sign near the southeast portion of the Zoo property. Twelve foot letters spelling the word “ZOO” will be constructed on the current camel exhibit boardwalk.

The new sign will have two main purposes, President and CEO, John Chapo said. “One will be to bring awareness to the Zoo from travelers along the roadway and trails and the other is a unique fundraising opportunity.”

Guests will be able to support the Zoo by purchasing metal cut-outs of hands with their family name on them. These hands will be placed on the inside of the zoo sign. “This will be a great way for families and individuals to leave a lasting impression at the Zoo,” Chapo said.

The letters for the sign may become the largest in town. “I think this will be one of the most unique ways for people to support the zoo and be part of something so iconic in town,” Chapo said.

TMCO and SignCo. of Lincoln assisted the Zoo in design and construction of the sign. “This sign and other Zoo projects are not possible without the support of organizations, generous individuals, and businesses,” noted Chapo.

Hands can be purchased for fifty dollars per hand and all proceeds go to maintain the Zoo and care for the animals. Individuals, families, and organizations can purchase hands online at LincolnZoo.org, by calling Kayla at 402.475.6741 ext. 131, or by visiting the Zoo.
